Chapter 1 by Thomas McCann

your friends always would joke around with you for being over prepared. You even built a fallout shelter in your backyard. You wish they were prepared as you. It is the year 2077 all nuclear missiles have exploded to a worldwide earthquake. You decide to take a journey into the nuclear radiation to find the remains of your friends.

Chapter 2 by Optional

After spending almost a year in the heavily stocked shelter you crank the wheel lock on the heavy door and look up into a grey sky. You take a deep breathe to rid your lungs of the stale recycled air hoping that the radiation levels had fallen. The rest of your family had been rolling in their navy blue SUV when the strike occurred. For their sake you hope they were vaporized relatively fast. "Are you ready dude?" you look at your side to a medium sized dog that had been your family pet. He looks up at you with an apprehensive look. Slinging your hunting rifle over your shoulder you take another look back into the vault and then shut and lock the door. The first stop on the trip is your friend Josh's house. His family had been a weird mix of doomsday preppers meets hoarders. You take the first step of the mile journey, your boot kicks up a small cloud of grey ash from the ground.

Chapter 3 by Optional

At Josh's house the door falls from the hinges as you attempt to open it. The noise startles your dog. Cringing at the sound you look around for any sign of motion. After a minute you figure the coast is clear and carefully step into the remains of the house. Large holes let in patches of the
